Red hair is usually the result of a mutation in a gene called MC1R, also known as a melanocortin 1 receptor. Normally, when activated by a certain hormone, MC1R sparks a series of signals that leads to the production of brown or black pigment. Yet, in cases when both parents are carriers of the recessive MC1R gene and said receptor is mutated ...

Upsampling from 44.1 to 96 kHz may introduce some very subtle artifacts, but it's unlikely you would notice them. One trick you should try is to do the upsampling within Foobar rather than letting Windows handle it. Foobar has a very good resampler plugin (SoX) - set the target sample rate to 96 kHz and quality to Best.
